THE PURPOSE OF

THE SEMINAR:

ADVANCED PROFESSIONAL TRAINING

The Executive Seminar in National and International Affairs is the most advanced training program available to senior career officials of the United States Government. The ten-months program has been conducted annually since 1958 by the Foreign Service Institute of the Department of State.

The purpose of the Seminar is to broaden the understanding by senior career officials of the Government of major trends and developments in the United States and abroad which should be reflected in national policy decisions. To that end, Seminar Members undertake a selective review of American political, economic, social, regional, and cultural issues and trends, and of their significance for the national decision-making process. The impact of national institutions on the formulation of national policy is also examined. This is done through extensive readings, travel, in-house discussions, the preparation of individual Case Studies, and by meetings with prominent educators, scientists, public officials and leaders in business, agriculture, labor, the media and the arts.

The theory behind the Seminar's curriculum is that career government officials as advisors and as managers of domestic, foreign policy, and national security programs must have a direct and comprehensive understanding of the diversity of contemporary America and of the factors that enter into the determination of national priorities.

As is customary, approximately half of the membership of the Twenty-third Executive Seminar is drawn from senior career officers of the Department of State and of the Foreign Service. The Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, the Central Intelligence Agency, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the International Communication Agency and the four military services are also represented by senior career officers.
